Dear Mr. Kelly:

Thank you for your inquiry about LGGLC. I have enclosed the most recent issue of our newsletter and a brochure on our organization. For the past year or so, LGGLC has been exchanging literature with the Libertarian Alliance, I think. Looking at the address for LA, I'm not quite sure - are there two libertarian organizations in London? I can't think of the address we send to, but it's not on Poland Street.

Anyway, I hope you enjoy our publications. Please let me know if you want to trade publications, it would be fine with me.

To the Editor or Publisher:

I am interested in obtaining your publication in bulk quantities. Initially 250 copies and later in greater numbers.

Let me explain: As a service to the gay community I am assembling (on a monthly basis) approximately 100 different legitimate, non-pornographic, newspapers, magazines, or bar & entertainment guides (of the FREE-TAKE ONE variety) from throughout the United States, along with Canada, and Great Britain.

These assortments of hometown gay papers will be shipped to a variety of places where multiple readership is likely to occur, such as bars, baths, gay churches and related organizations. A minimal fee (not yet determined) to cover shipping and handling will be charged to subscribers of the service.

I would like to include your publication in this assortment. Here's my proposal:

If you will ship at least 250 copies of your publication by U.P.S. or Parcel Post to my address in St. Louis and authorize me to re-distribute your publication I will provide the following:

1. Reimbursement of your out-of-pocket shipping costs.
2. An immediate and legitimate increase in your circulation.

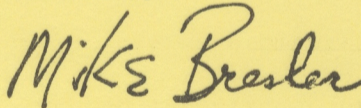

It is my observation that out-of-town gay publications are read with special interest and are often passed around to a number of readers. Consider, too, that exotic, rarely seen out-of-town papers enhance the promotion of a locality and encourage travel. (A selling point to your advertisers!)

So . . . if the idea of having your publication read on a regular basis in hundreds of places where it's not now seen appeals to you then I urge you to bundle up an initial 250 or so copies of the current (or a fairly recent) issue and send them to the address below.

Your observations on the merit of this project are invited. I, personally, am excited about contributing to the dissemination of the news and features of gay culture. Your publication is a statement of this culture. I want to read your journal and I want to help make it possible for a lot of others to do the same.

Thanking you in advance for your favorable consideration, and looking forward to receiving an initial trial shipment of your publication, I am,

Sincerely,

Michael A. Bresler

PS: I'm ready to assemble and mail the assorted papers. I urgently need copies of your publication to complete the collection.

Thanks again.

Dear LGLC,

Firstly, please let me apologize for the handwritten note, but my typewriter is in the shop for repairs and I wanted to get this into the post as quickly as possible. I hope my script is not too difficult to follow.

I am writing because I only recently learned of your organization. It is quite lonely being a gay Libertarian here in Canada. Most Canadian Libertarian Party types, while certainly supportive of gay and Lesbian concerns, hold fast to the Randian concept of "A=A" (i.e. men should be men and women, women). Most gays and lesbians, on the other hand, are tied into the New Democratic Party, the major socialist party here, because they are the only main-line political party supporting gay rights.

Needless to say, I feel uncomfortable working with either group.

If it is at all possible, could you give me some idea about what you are up to? I would really like to know how you are making out and how you managed to keep going.

Thanking you in advance for your help,

They seek only to revise current methods of acquiring and wielding political power. Radical and revolutionary movements seek not to revise but to revoke. The target of revocation should be obvious. The target is politics itself.

Radicals and revolutionaries have had their sights trained on politics for some time. As governments fail around the world, as more millions become aware that government never has and never can humanely and effectively manage men's affairs, government's own inadequacy will emerge, at last, as the basis for a truly radical and revolutionary movement. In the meantime, the radical-revolutionary position is a lonely one. It is feared or hated, by both the right and left—although both right and left must borrow from it to survive. The radical-revolutionary position is libertarianism and its socioeconomic form is laissez-faire capitalism.

Libertarianism is the view that each man is the absolute owner of his life, to use and primary allegiance to himself, is rejected by patriots who sing of freedom but also shout of banners and boundaries. There is no operating political movement in the world today that is based upon a libertarian philosophy. If there were, it would be in the anomalous position of using political power to abolish political power.

Perhaps a regular political movement overcoming this anomaly, will actually develop. Believe it or not, there were strong possibilities of such a development in the 1964 campaign of Barry Goldwater. Underneath the scary headlines, Goldwater hammered away at such purely political structures as the draft, general taxation, censorship, nationalism, legislated conformity, political establishment of social norms, and war as an instrument of international policy.

It is true that, in a common political paradox, Goldwater (a major general in the Air Force Reserve) has spoken of reducing state power suggestion of libertarianism in the statements of any other politicians during that year's campaign.

I was a speechwriter for Barry Goldwater in the 1964 campaign. During the campaign, I recall very clearly, there was a moment, at a conference to determine the campaign's "farm strategy," when a respected and very conservative Senator arose to say: "Barry, you've got to make it clear that you believe that the American farmer has a right to a decent living."

Senator Goldwater replied, with the tact for which he was renowned: "But he doesn't have a right to it. Neither do I. We just have a right to try for it." And that was the end of that.

Now, in contrast, take Tom Hayden, at that time of Students for a Democratic Society. Writing in The Radical Papers, he said that his "revolution" sought "institutions outside the established order." One of those institutions, Goldwater said he wanted to abolish, to topple it, to forever end its power to advantage or disadvantage anyone.

In foreign policy, particularly, there arises a great impediment to the emergence of a libertarian wing in either of the major political parties. Men who call upon the end of state authority in every other area insist upon its being maintained to build a war machine with which to hold the Communists at bay. It is only lately that the imperatives of logic—and the emergence of antistatist forces in eastern Europe—have begun to make it more acceptable to ask whether the garrison state needed to maintain the Cold War might not be as bad as or worse than the punitive threat being guarded against. Goldwater has not taken and never did take such a revisionist line—but, among Cold Warriors, his disposition to libertarian principles makes him more susceptible than most.

Back in May, 1985, LGLC accepted for publication an advertisement for NOMOS on an "exchange" basis, and that ad was subsequently reproduced in issues of the LGLC Newsletter.
