

My love
 this love has not been forbidden. It's one risk: sailing down through the warm lateral of the heart to a windless bay. One of our mothers prays for this song to survive her own deafened ears, the other pieces together a quilt, one that will cover us, not for shame, nor decency, but as the chill streetlights fluoresce on our light sleep, finally tucking us in, for warmth from "Lullaby" by Olga Broumas*

Yalesbians provides a political, feminist network and a supportive social environment for lesbians at Yale. Members have lobbied locally and nationally for Gay Rights, designed workshops, and headed forums on issues concerning sexism and racism in our society. Meetings are open to all women, regardless of sexual preference, as Yalesbians encourages for each woman, the discovery of her own individual sexuality.

* Olga Broumas is a lesbian feminist and winner of the Yale Series of Younger Poets for 1976.
